The Art of the Game

To begin, launch the game in order to attack its enemy aspect. You are the captain of a jet fighter - a dual part of the island's defense system.

As you spring to your feet and dash across the tarmac, you wonder what they'll do next. One time, leaping into the cockpit, you join the engine.

The instruments are functioning OK and your plane starts into the new game. The target acquisition device tells you that the enemy is heading for the nuclear power station. You must try to intercept the bomber before it gets there.

You fire and miss, dodge a missile and try again. There is a binding flash and the friendly plane drops like a stone. The power station is safe - for now at least - but what about the other targets? Can you take them from this position?

Enemy planes are everywhere, but fortunately you clear the skies and head for home - hoping it wasn't bombed while you were away.
